

PittOnline Spring Term 2007 (2074)

Most courses offered through PittOnline are web-based, meaning that most course materials can be accessed through CourseWeb, the University's course management system.

Web courses feature web-based instruction and interaction. Students interact with their instructors and other students through the class web site. Students complete the course requirements within one term and move through the course materials as a cohort.

Hybrid courses combine web-based interaction and face-to-face instruction. Students are required to attend scheduled workshops and participate in online discussions and activities. Students complete the course requirements within one term and move through the course materials as a cohort.

Self-paced courses utilize a flexible format where students move through assigned course materials at their own pace. Workshops and web-based activities are features of some courses. The course syllabus provides more information about workshops and web-based activities for these courses. Self-paced courses without CourseWeb are designated with the SPW designation.
